BASIS FOR RECOMMENDATION:

Architecture:

The house is a two-story, rectangular plan, side-gabled frame house with Colonial Revival styling. The symmetrical façade defines the Colonial Revival style; the house has a central, front-gabled portico on monumental columns; the full-width full-height front porch extends to either side of the central portico, all supported on monumental fluted columns. A broken pediment frames the central doorway, which has a pair of sidelights. The house was designed by prominent Austin architects Page and Southerland.

Historical Associations:

The house was built in 1939 for William A. and Lillian “Dink” Swearingen, who had moved to Austin a few years prior to take over a local Ford dealership. William A. Swearingen was a native of Lockhart, Texas, where his father ran the local bank. W.A. Swearingen graduated from the University of Texas with a degree in business administration, then went to work for banks in Houston and Lockhart. He took over his father’s Ford dealership in Austin, then made the move to Austin and purchased the local Ford dealership here. He asked local businessman and City Council member Bob Armstrong to join him in the partnership, and together, they established Swearingen-Armstrong Ford, which had its offices at 1st (now Cesar Chavez) and Colorado Streets, a site that had been home to several auto dealerships over the years. Armstrong was a minor partner in the venture, and W.A. “Bill” Swearingen ran the company for almost 20 years. In the late 1950s, he sold his interest in Swearingen-Armstrong and established Swearingen Brothers with his twin brother, James, the local Edsel dealership. Unfortunately, the Edsel line of cars did not fare well, and W.A. Swearingen got out of the car business thereafter. Bob Armstrong continued the local Ford dealership, and established Armstrong-Johnson Ford, with Leif Johnson. That dealership remains a fixture in the Austin automobile market today as Leif Johnson Ford.

The Swearingens sold the house in 1955 and moved to a house on Balcones Drive. The Edward and Kathleen Maloney bought the house in 1955 from a third party and lived here until 1959. Edward Maloney was the vice-president and general manager of E.M. Scarbrough and Sons, Austin’s most prestigious department store.

In 1959, Jack and Margaret Gray purchased the house, and lived here for the rest of their lives. Jack Gray was a native of Wills Point, Texas, and came to the University of Texas as a basketball player. He married Margaret Belmont, the daughter of legendary UT Athletics Director Theo Belmont, and initially lived near the Bellmonts on W. 31st Street. Jack Gray played basketball for UT, setting scoring records, and receiving honors. In the late 1930s, he became the head coach for the UT basketball team, a position he held until his retirement in 1951. As head coach, Jack Gray brought UT basketball to the forefront of the university athletic program with consistent winning seasons. After he retired from coaching, he established Grayco Constructors, a pipeline company that was responsible for bringing Canadian and Alaskan crude oil to refineries in the United States.

Biography of William A. Swearingen

William A. Swearingen (Bill) was born July 23, 1906 in Lockhart, Texas where his father was the president of the First National Bank. After attending public schools in Lockhart, Bill graduated from the University of Texas with highest honors in 1927. He was awarded the gold key of Beta Gamma Sigma in recognition of his scholastic achievements in the university's School of Business Administration. Both he and his twin brother were on the UT track team with Clyde Littlefield as their coach. It was at UT that Bill met Lily Flynn, and they married shortly thereafter. Upon graduation, Bill worked in banks in Houston and Lockhart before becoming employed by the Ford dealership in Lockhart that his father owned.

In 1938, Bill moved from Lockhart back to Austin and, together with his twin brother, James, purchased the local Ford dealership. The Swearingen name was very well-known and respected in Lockhart, but not yet in Austin. So to help the business get a good start, the Swearingens asked Bob Armstrong (a well respected businessman and City Council member) to become a minor partner and share in the name of the business, which became Swearingen-Armstrong Inc. That same year, Bill and Dink also purchased the lot at 1606 Watchhill Road, and hired Page and Southerland Architects to design a Country French style home for their family. Just eleven years after moving into their new home, the Swearingens again hired Page, Southerland and Page to design the additions of a game room plus other rooms. The front of the house, with the long balcony on the second floor, remained the same. A year earlier, Page Southland had designed a remodel for the Swearingen-Armstrong Motor Company building.

At the start of WWII, Bill served as a Lt. Colonel in the Air Force, commanding an Army Airwaves Communication System (AACS) unit that installed and operated radio stations and navigational aids on air transport routes in the continental United States and the CBI Theater. Back in civilian life, Bill continued the operation of his amateur radio station W5UJ, and he and James broadcast the first UT football game, heard by those who also owned a transmitter.

In 1955, while he continued as president of Swearingen-Armstrong, he also became VP of Texas Electronic Co., a company he and his brother formed to sell the latest invention, the television, to Austin homes. In 1957, after 19 years as Ford Dealers, Bill and James sold their interest in order to become owners and operators of the new Austin dealership for Edsel, Ford's newest line of cars. Bill was president of the new Swearingen Brothers, but the Edsel never gained popularity with contemporary American car buyers and sold poorly.

After the close of the Edsel dealership, Bill went to work for First Federal Savings and Loan. He later became Account Executive for the American Industrial Leasing Company, and for a number of years, was active in the operations of the Commercial Rental Company, an Austin firm that specialized in the leasing of fleet cars and trucks. Bill was president of Austin Country Club and died at the age of 82.

Note: Some information received in an interview with son, Dr. Robert Swearingen.

Biography of Lillian Flynn (Dink) Swearingen

Lily Swearingen was born in Arkansas but grew up in Ozona, Texas. While attending school in San Antonio, a classmate began calling her Dink and the nickname stuck for the remainder of her life.

She came to school at the University of Texas, where she was a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority. She married Bill and they had two sons. She raised her sons while also volunteering as a member of the Junior League and the Settlement Club. After the close of the Edsel Dealership, Bill and Dink divorced and she became active in Austin real estate. She eventually owned her own business, Dink Swearingen Realty Company, and served as president of the Austin Real Estate Association.

Armstrong-Johnson Inc. Begin Ford Dealership

Armstrong-Johnson Inc., Austin's new authorized Ford dealership, announced the completion of organization Wednesday. A formal opening will be held later.

Partners in the new exclusive Ford dealership for Austin are Bob Armstrong and Leif Johnson.

Armstrong has been associated with the auto business in Austin for 30 years. He was a part owner in the Swearingen - Armstrong Ford dealership for the past 19 years.

Johnson was previously general manager of the Ben Griffin Auto Company in Dallas, one of the largest Ford dealerships in Texas. He also served in Dallas for eight years as district representative and assistant district manager for the Ford Motor Company.

W. A. and James S. Swearingen, former partners in the Ford firm here, will operate the Austin dealership for Edsel, new Ford Motor Company line of cars to be placed on the market later this year.

The Ford agency will have its showroom and offices at the present Ford dealership location at and Colorado.

Armstrong said the new Ford agency would offer a complete service and parts department, and a body and fender repair service. Used car stock of the firm will be displayed next to the main building.

Johnson, who assumed partnership duties early this week, is a native of Massachusetts. He has lived in Texas the past 12 years. He is a graduate of Concordia College in Minnesota and spent nine years as a Naval pilot, serving in the Pacific Theater during World War II. Prior to joining Ford in Dallas, he was executive officer of the Dallas Naval Air Station.

He has a wife, Dolores, two sons, Robert and Curt Douglas, and a daughter, Brook-Anne.

Armstrong, in announcing formation of the new dealership, said "we know that the Austin public will certainly benefit from the vast Ford experience and knowledge that Leif Johnson has."

He also wished the Swearingens "my very best wishes for their success in the Edsel line of cars."

Armstrong said that a majority of former Swearingen-Armstrong employees would remain with the Ford agency.

A primary policy will be to give every customer the most value possible for every dollar spent in the purchase of cars, trucks, parts or service, he said.

Armstrong-Johnson department heads include Bill Rogers, general sales manager; Tom House, assistant sales manager; Roy Locke, service manager; Clay Hardin, parts manager; G. S. Bradley, truck manager; and Herbert Becker, office manager.

New Firm Preparing To Market Edsel Line JUL 5 1957

A new automotive firm with a new building and a new line of automobiles will make its debut July 15.

The firm is Swearingen Bros. for whom a new $60,000 automobile sales and service building is being constructed at 841 West Sixth Street. The new line of cars is the Edsel, in the middle-cost bracket to be introduced over the nation next September.

The Edsel is the newest line to be manufactured by the Ford Motor Company, with two convertibles and five station wagons among the 18 models to be placed on the market this fall. The new Austin firm announces it will handle four models which will cover a wide price range, starting just above the lowest price cars and extending almost to the highest price group.

With the formation of the new firm comes the announcement that the owners of Swearingen-Armstrong Inc. have effected a complete realignment of ownership and operations. At present the owners of Swearingen-Armstrong Inc. are W. A. Swearingen, J. S. Swearingen, Warwick F. Field and Bob Armstrong.

Under the arrangement the new firm of Swearingen Bros. Inc. will be owned by W. A. Swearingen, J. S. Swearingen and Warwick F. Field. Bob Armstrong and an associate will have the Ford franchise and will continue to operate a complete Ford agency at the present address (First and Colorado Streets) maintaining a stock of new cars and trucks as well as the parts and service department.

The new Swearingen Bros. Inc. firm will occupy the new building being constructed on West Sixth Street and also the existing used car lot on West Fifth Street and the adjoining body shop.

The parties involved have been pleasantly associated in the automobile business in Austin for almost 19 years and they expressed thanks for the business which the people of Austin have favored the firm of Swearingen-Armstrong Inc.

The new masonry commercial building now under erection at Bowie Street and West Sixth was designed by Page, Southerland and Page, Austin architects, and is being built by the J. M. Odom Construction Company of Austin.

Plans call for a ground floor and a mezzanine containing 12,640 square feet of floor space. The first story will be 134 feet long and 72 feet wide and the second story will be 26 feet by 72 feet.

The new firm announced Clarence Larson will continue to be in charge of the body shop to be owned and operated by Swearingen Bros. Inc.

Biography of Jack Stuart Gray

Jack Gray was a legend at the University of Texas, both as an All-American athlete and a very successful basketball coach. He was born May 12, 1911 and was a native of Wills Point, Texas. He attended Arlington State College before coming to UT, where he received his BBA and lettered in both basketball and football. As a UT basketball player from 1933-35, Jack set a Southwest Conference record with 32 points in 1933, a record that stood for 16 years. In 1935, Gray was the first UT basketball player to be honored as an All-American, and was "All-SWC" all 3 years of his varsity career. Gray was known for his one-handed "push" shot, a precursor of the jump shot. He was also an "All-SWC" end on the Longhorns football team.

Gray played a major role in the emergence of UT and the Southwest Conference as national athletic powers and his influence in UT athletics spanned five decades. In 1937, with one year of coaching experience, Gray took over the head coaching job for the basketball team at the age of 25. In his first six years as coach, he led the Longhorns to five winning seasons, as well as to their first Elite Eight in the first NCAA Tournament in 1939. Jack entered WWII with the navy, where he ranked as Lieutenant Commander and received four battle stars and a presidential unit citation. Upon his return, Gray led the Longhorns to their first Final Four in the 1947 NCAA Tournament, and got his team in the National Invitation Tournament in 1948 (their first AP Poll ranking was #20 in 1949). Jack ranks third all-time in Longhorns basketball history in wins with 194 victories to 97 losses. He was head UT basketball coach for 12 years, which as of 2011, ranked as the second longest basketball coaching term at UT. Gray's teams reached the Final Four twice. During his years with the Longhorns, Gray served as a member of the Basketball Rules Committee and as first VP of the National Basketball Association. Jack retired from coaching in 1951 but remained active in UT athletics, serving as a member of the UT Athletics Council and as a founding member and director of the Texas Longhorn Education Foundation. Jack was the first SWC basketball player to be installed in the Texas Sports Hall of Fame, and was also inducted into the Longhorn Hall of Honor and the Texas Schoolboy Hall of Fame. In 1980, he was selected as a "UT Distinguished Alumni."

After coaching, Jack began another successful career as founder and president of Grayco Constructors, a pipeline company he started in the 1950s. In 1957, Grayco laid 140 miles of pipe in 76 days in Canada, a performance which was considered a new record in the business. Jack eventually served as president of the National Pipeline Contractors Association of the US and Canada. He was also elected to the Austin School Board for more than four years, and served on the board of the YMCA, the Tennessee Bank and Trust Company of Houston, and the Oilfield Truck and Equipment Company of Houston.

Jack Gray was married to Margaret Belmont Gray and they had three children. He died in 1992 at the age of 81.

Biography of Margaret Belmont Gray

Margaret Belmont Gray was a native Austinite. She attended Pease Elementary School, Austin High School, and the University of Texas at Austin in 1938 where she earned a B.A. in Journalism. At UT, Margaret was a Bluebonnet Belle and a member of Pi Beta Phi. She met Jack during her UT days and they were married on a Thanksgiving morning at All Saints Episcopal Church when he was the UT basketball coach.

Margaret and Jack had three children. While raising them, she also served as a member of the Austin Junior League, the Junior Helping Hand, Pi Beta Phi Alumni Association, and the Open Forum.

Margaret was a charter member of the Planned Parenthood of Austin Board of Directors. She died on February 2, 2007.

B.Y.O.S. Party for Jack Gray

BY MORRIS FRANK

A B.Y.O.S. party for Jack Gray? In this instance, not Bring Your Own Scotch.

Maybe that would be all right, too.

For the esteemed Jack Gray is not in the coaching profession any more.

He's a pipeline construction baron. And I wouldn't imagine those moguls would object to a wee bit of Scotch or perhaps Bourbon. Champagne on banner years.

However, the B.Y.O.S. in this case is Bring Your Own Scrapbook.

Because as far as I am concerned the most startling incident of the holiday season was when I encountered a fellow who had never heard of Jack Gray's feats as either an athlete or a coach.

He knew of Jack Gray as a business mighty, bank director, et al.

It was at the delightful cocktail party hosted by the Jack Duchesneaus.

The affable Jack and his lovely Martha, the former Martha Giezendanner, were greeting old friends at the Shamrock Hilton. They live in Lake Forest, Ill.

At the gathering were some business associates of Jack Gray as well as some Longhorns who played for him when he was an outstanding basketball coach.

Someone was commenting on Jack's recent induction into the Texas Hall of Fame.

Puzzled Bank Director

A fellow director of the Houston National Bank wandered up and overheard the name of Jack Gray.

This director is a very successful businessman, rancher, and on.

He follows Dow-Jones averages closer though than batting averages.

He is far more expert on the stock market pages than on the sports pages.

For he asked in all seriousness: "That Jack Gray couldn't be the one who is the big pipeline construction man, could it?"

When told Gray was a terrific football end, a truly basketball immortal and a compiler of an amazing record as a basketball coach, this fellow director was stunned.

"He seems an impressive fellow at our bank directors meetings," he said, "but I never dreamed all that about him."

Blow to Wills Point

That would be a blow to anybody in Wills Point, Texas.

Now, I don't know if the Houston National has any big depositors from Wills Point.

But if so, my good friend, the bank director, had better brief himself on the athletic skills of the pride of Wills Point, Jack Gray, the pipeline construction tycoon of Austin.

In fact, maybe ole Gray should not only bring his scrapbook to the next bank directors meeting but read it.

That would take extensive time.

However, outside of seeing to it guys like me don't get loans except with 300 percent collateral, I have never figured just what bank directors do at their meetings anyway.

And the handsome Gray has a very interesting scrapbook.

I have read chapters of it myself in serial form from time to time.

What with Jack a bank director, I suppose I should laud him more than ever.

Sturdy Defense

But he could always set a sturdy defense as a coach.

And I am sure he is even more rigid in his defense against unsecured loans.

Anyway, Jack, chum, don't forget at the next board of directors meeting of the Houston National, suggest a B.Y.O.S. party—Bring Your Own Scrapbook.

Gray Named Director By Pipeline Men

Jack S. Gray, president of Grayco Constructors Inc. of Austin, was named a director of the Pipeline Contractors Association at its eighth annual convention held recently in Boca Raton, Fla. Gray was a star athlete and basketball coach for the University of Texas prior to entering the pipeline business.

Currently operating in Southern Louisiana, the Grayco Constructors recently completed 94 miles of 30-inch pipeline construction between Port Lavaca and Agua Dulce.

The 53 contractors belonging to the national organization laid 70 per cent of all lines in the United States in 1955. The pipeline construction mileage for the year was 15,700, almost 60 per cent of which was natural gas line construction.

Gray has been in the pipeline construction business for almost five years, starting soon after he resigned as basketball coach at Texas in 1951. He was head coach for 13 seasons, producing two champions and a co-champion. His 1947 team took third place in the national collegiate playoff and lost only two of 28 games, both by one-point margins.

Headquarters for the Grayco Company is in Austin, where Gray resides with his wife and two young daughters.

The Austin AmericanJewel Party for AdmiralsAm. 8-16-67

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Gray entertained the Admirals and their wives and the royalty of Austin last Friday evening at a champagne party in the Maximilian Room of the Driskill.

The party, the day preceding the sixth annual Admirals Ball, was an occasion for displaying a million dollars worth of jewels, including many antique pieces. Bill Koen of Joe Koen & Son arranged the exhibit.

The jewel party is becoming a tradition with the Admirals on the final weekend of the Aqua Festival each August. This year it was held just before the water parade.

Guests at the party visited with the royalty, enjoyed a lavish buffet and tried on many of the jewels. One of the most admired pieces was a fantastically expensive jeweled elephant. "I'll buy it," said one Admiral, "provided I can get a pair."

Jack S. Gray

Jack S. Gray, a legend at The University of Texas as an All-American athlete and successful coach, died Saturday at the age of 81.

Known as an innovator both on and off the playing field or basketball court, Gray played a major role in the emergence of UT and the Southwest Conference as national athletic powers. He was influential in UT athletics for five decades, and was also a successful entrepreneur before battling Alzheimer's disease in final years.

In 1935, Gray became the first UT basketball player to be honored as an All-American. Two years later, at the age of 25, he was selected as the head basketball coach at UT.

During his 12 years as head coach, from 1937-42 and again from 1942-51, he developed the next three UT basketball All-Americans, won the Southwest Conference title three times, and reached the NCAA's Final Four twice. Gray's teams never had a losing season.

In addition to his outstanding basketball career, Gray was an All-Southwest Conference end on the Longhorn football team.

After retiring from coaching in 1951, Gray became a successful pipeline contractor. Even after retirement, he remained active in athletics at UT, serving as a member of the UT Athletics Council and as a founding member and director of the Texas Longhorn Education Foundation.

Gray has been honored as a UT Distinguished Alumnus by the Ex-Students Association, and is a member of the Texas Sports Hall of Fame, the Longhorn Hall of Honor, and the Texas Schoolboy Hall of Fame.

He was also a past president of the National Association of Pipeline Contractors.

Gray is survived by his wife, Margaret Belmont Gray; and his three children, Candy Gray Becker, Chica Gray Younger and Jack S. Gray, Jr.; and six grandchildren, Galeana Elizabeth Younger, John Stuart Younger, Isabella Gray Younger, Margaret Millet Lowrey, Mary Pauline Lowrey and Andre Jackson Stuart Gray III. Other survivors include his sisters, Kathien Heard and Leemie Odom. His brother, Robert Earl Gray, preceded him in death.

Funeral services will be at 11:00

AM, Monday at All Saints Episcopal Church in Austin with the Reverend Armistead Powell presiding.

In lieu of flowers, the family asks that contributions be sent to the Jack S. Gray Scholarship Fund, in care of the Union National Bank Trust Department, Austin, Texas.

Arrangements by Weed-Corley Funeral Home, 3125 N. Lamar. 452-8811.
